WHEREAS, child sexual abuse causes long term psychological distress to the victims and their families, and, ultimately upon our entire island community; and,

WHEREAS, along with the psychological suffering and the negative sociological implications of child sexual abuse, child sexual abuse creates a heavy economic burden on the government, due to increased public assistance benefits for separate maintenance of family members, increased foster care costs for children who have been removed from their home, increased costs to the criminal justice system due to additional court proceedings, increased costs of Public Health and Social Services and Mental Health due to the need for crisis intervention and long term counseling; and,

WHEREAS, child sexual abuse may also contribute to other anti-social behavior which requires intervention by the family court; and
